Contents

Foreword ix
Mere Berryman

Volume overview xix

Part I 1

Section 1. Introduction: What do we mean by education policy, and why should educators care? 3
Jo Smith

Case. Policy versus procedure 11
Vivienne Mackisack

Chapter 1.1. Law and policy 18
Nicola Leete

Case. M and R v S and Board of Trustees of Palmerston North Boys' High School—A lesson in understanding the importance of implementing policies in accordance with the law 35
Nicola Leete

Section 2. Background of education policy in Aotearoa New Zealand 39

Chapter 2.1. Educational standards and teacher professionalism in Aotearoa New Zealand: Policy rationales, union agency, and competing discourses 41
Huidan Niu

Case. Charter schools: Enacting community engagement or feeding a market of consumers? 62
Ruth Boyask

Chapter 2.2. From the state to the community, and back to the state? Revisiting the devolution agenda since the Tomorrow's Schools reform 67
Marta Estellés and Jade Wrathall

Chapter 2.3. Early childhood policy in Aotearoa New Zealand 99
Jenny Ritchie

Chapter 2.4. Developing linguistically and culturally sustaining Pacific bilingual and immersion education provision in Aotearoa New Zealand 114
Rae Si'ilata, Taule'ale'ausumai Tofaga Violet Tu'uga Stevenson, and Ro Parsons

Section 3. The role of power, equity, and values in Aotearoa New Zealand education policy making 135

Chapter 3.1. The harmful impact of policy on Māori and Pacific students 137
Hana O'Regan, Pam O'Connell, and Maraea Hunia

Chapter 3.2. Educational accountability in Aotearoa New Zealand: Using "accountability webs" to map a system 168
Loic Menzies, Melanie Ehren, Sum Yue (Jessica) Ko, Alison O'Mara-Eves, and Antonia Simon

Section 4. The political system and culture in Aotearoa New Zealand's education policy making 181

Chapter 4.1. Neoliberalism made visible: The trajectory of phonics testing in Aotearoa New Zealand 183
Jade Wrathall and Pablo Del Monte

Chapter 4.2. Superdiverse learners in Aotearoa New Zealand 211
Angel Chan

Section 5. Introduction: The key education policy actors 229

Case. SchoolDocs and its implementation in Aotearoa New Zealand schools 231
Liuning Yang

Chapter 5.1. Creating a collective New Zealand Rural Schools Leadership Association 238
Jennifer Tatebe, Jane Corcoran, and Andrew King

Chapter 5.2. Te Whakarōpūtanga Kaitiaki Kura o Aotearoa—New Zealand School Boards Association (TWKKA—NZSBA) 254
Meredith Kennett

Chapter 5.3. The role of subject associations in education policy 269
Pip Tinning

Chapter 5.4. NZEI Te Riu Roa: Organising for change 277
Jessie Moss and Shannon Walsh

Case. Teacher unions and education policy in Aotearoa New Zealand 304
Huidan Niu

Part II 311

Section 6. Issue definition 313

Chapter 6.1. The importance of examining an issue from multiple perspectives 315
Jo Smith

Case. (Mis)defining the reasons forschool truancy? 324
Jo Smith

Section 7. Agenda setting 327

Chapter 7.1. Why good ideas wait: Kingdon's multiple streams model and the politics of agenda setting 329
Farid Ullah Khan and Jo Smith

Case. Agenda setting in the age of hashtags: Introducing the Kingdon-Khan model 341
Farid Ullah Khan

Case. The Abbey Caves tragedy: A heartbreaking lesson in agenda setting 346
Farid Khan

Chapter 7.2. Ka Ora, Ka Ako: Agenda setting through Kingdon's multiple streams model 350
Angtola Huy

Section 8. Policy formulation 357

Chapter 8.1. Policy transfer and policy borrowing 363
Bronwyn Elisabeth Wood and Taylor Hughson

Chapter 8.2. Letters to Erica 2025—Sharing and solidarity 384
Sarah-Kay Coulter

Chapter 8.3. The revolving door of grammar in Aotearoa New Zealand curriculum policy 391
Maria Hirschi

Chapter 8.4. The English curriculum rewrite: A case of political football 401
Pip Tinning

Section 9. Policy adoption 409

Chapter 9.1. Making policy happen: The role of policy instruments 412
Yan Xie and Jo Smith

Chapter 9.2. The attendance challenge in Aotearoa New Zealand: A system-wide call to action 420
James van Schie

Chapter 9.3. Changing initial teacher education through policy 425
Fiona Ell

Chapter 9.4. The (changing) role of subject associations in preparing policy for implementation 433
Pip Tinning

Section 10. Policy implementation and enactment 439

Chapter 10.1. Making policy work: Educational leadership and policy enactment 443
Melanie Drake, Ruth Boyask, and Maryanne Macdonald

Case. National's literacy policy: The challenges of an accelerated rollout 468
Emma Cunningham

Case. Dual-enrolment pathways in primary education in Aotearoa New Zealand 472
Sarah-Kay Coulter

Case. Action Plan for Pacific Education: From aspiration to implementation 479
Jo Smith

Section 11. Policy evaluation 481

Chapter 11.1. Deciding whether to revise, discard, or institutionalise a policy in education 483
Jo Smith

Case. Strengthening inservice teacher education practice project 495
Ro Parsons and Joanna Higgins

Case. The "phones away for the day" policy in Aotearoa New Zealand schools: Evaluating its impact on social media usage in teaching 501
Mazelle Chuardy

Section 12. Looking ahead 505

Chapter 12.1. Finding gold: When school community desires align with educational policy 507
Billy O'Steen

Case. The promise of education for sustainability: Examining the potential of policy to guide teaching and learning 529
Sally Birdsall and Jenny Ritchie

Case. A case study in democratic disregard: The curriculum rewrite 554
Bevan Holloway

Chapter 12.2. Explicit teaching as equity: Reframing literacy pedagogy in Aotearoa New Zealand policy 559
Maria Hirschi

Chapter 12.3. Education policy mis-step—When refresh becomes politically driven reform 564
Claire Amos

List of contributors 571

Index 581