

What do the teachers at your school really think about their job and their working conditions?

Would you like more information about the particular aspects of your school's culture and working conditions that teachers are positive about, and any aspects that could be strengthened?

NZCER's targeted workplace survey will help you find out.

How the survey works

The Teacher Workplace survey is designed for all teaching staff (0.5 and above) within your school. The survey asks teachers to rate items in five areas:

- Physical working environment and resources
- Satisfaction with school
- School leadership
- Professional development
- School organisation

Items in the survey are internationally research-based, and the results are completely anonymous for teachers and confidential to the school. Schools are also given the option to add up to ten additional questions of their choice.

Benefits

- Provides a snapshot picture of what teachers think about their work and their working environment.
- Gives teachers a forum for expressing their views with absolute confidentiality.
- Provides an opportunity to look broadly at gathering data within an important component for improving teaching and learning.

NZCER's Education Advisor, Cathie Johnson, can provide support and challenge for how to use the survey results to define or address the problem for improvement.
